Abstract: The article is the research result of the reform of Usul Al Fiqh proposed by Hasan Turabi. The method applied is descriptive qualitative, exposing the entire ideas of Hasan Turabi pertaining to the reform of Usul Fiqh and proceeded by the approach of content analysis. The next step is to make comparison with ideas of other Usul Fiqh scholars. The reform of Usul Fiqh according to Hasan Turabi is to implement qiyas al-wasi (wide qiyas) and istishab al-wasi (wide qiyas). The method applied by Hasan Turabi has already been used by former Usul Fiqh scholars. Hasan Turabi only adds the words al-wasi. The essence of qiyas al-wasi and istishab al-wasi by Hasan Turabi is traditional issues already been done for a long time in a certain community or actual issues.

Keywords: tajdid, al-qiyās wāsi, istishāb al-wāsi.

1. Introduction

Islam is a perfect religion encompassing all aspects of human life. The perfection of Islam can be seen from the goal of syaria'at, that is to get happiness and welfare of mankind in the world or hereafter.

To get the ultimate purpose in life, Allah SWT has provided the Quran, brought by Prophet Muhammad. The teachings of the Koran cover theology, Shari'ah, and morals. In Shari'ah there is a set of rules governing human way of life and manners of worship rites to the Lord, similar to prayer, zakat, munakahat, jinayat and other issues and the whole sets of rules is called Fiqh. Fiqh is a study related to syara, rules of personality to be practiced derived from the norms of tafsiliyah.

Efforts to produce the fiqh materials from the norms of tafsiliyah are termed Usul Fiqh. Usul Fiqh is a study of norms contributing to the istinbāt rules of syara. Furu 'through detailed norms.

Usul Fiqh is the main study to be possessed by everyone who wishes to practice istinbāt of the Qur'an and hadith of the Prophet. Usul Fiqh is a very important instrument, without which no one could do istiddlāl properly as we could know the ways to cultivate the norms directly from the text of Usul Fiqh.

Usul Fiqh has been formulated comprehensively into an independent study since the second century H. The goal to be achieved from the science of Usul Fiqh is to implement the norms syara with the forms of hymns. If we have already known the method of Usul Fiqh already formulated by the former scholars of fiqh, then if a certain lawsuit occurs and needs a solution, while such a case is found in the classical books of fiqh, then we have to implement the norms formulated the fiqh scholars in the former books of usul fiqh to find the solution, such as the ar-Risalah by Imam al-Shaf'i (w.204 H), the book o al-Mu ' tamad, by Abû Muhammad al-Husayn ibn 'Ali al-Bisri (w.463 H), of the school of thought of mutakallimin, al-proposal by Imam Abû al-Hasan Ubaiddullah ibn Hasan al-Kharkhî (w.340 H / 952 AD), and the book of Usul Fiqh by Abu Bakr al-Jassās of Hanafiyyah school of thought.

The mujtahid after Imam Shafi'i in doing ristiddal or istinbāt to produce an issu of fiqh, use the norms already formulated by the former mujtahid and by this comes the term mujtahid mazhab.

The practice of ijihad which has lasted for more than 1,000 years old, while the norms are stable and unchanged. On the other hand, times have changed and the law events keep emerging and far different from those in time of the formulation of fiqh norms. Then a question arises whether those norms are still relevant to the present condition or whether those norms need redrafting.

In this article the writer exposes the ideas of Hasan Al-Turabi on the importance of the reform of Usul Fiqh.

2. The Meaning of Reform

Etymologically reforms means Jaddada and said to be ajadda ash-syai meaning making something new.

The terminology, tajdid means reform of religious life, either in the form of thought or movement, as a reaction or response to internal and external challenges regarding beliefs and social affairs of the people. Tajdid is also interpreted an effort to change the lives and activities of the Muslims from the present condition to the realization one to uplift the welfare of mankind.

According to Karen Armstrong tajdid is a reform movement to restore Islam to its purity by returning to Qur'an and Sunnah by refusing legalization and practice emerging later. Reform according to Karen Armstrong is a purification meaning that the conditions of people have deviated from the values outlined in Qur'an and Sunnah. Thus purification of Islam is highly needed to clean and sterile all elements that are not derived from Islam.

Regarding the reform of Usul Fiqh, Dr. Sha'ban Muhammad Isma'il says that the meaning of Usul Fiqh reform is the reconstruction of the structure of Usul Fiqh to be new, having the forms compatible with the present age.

Pertaining to tajdid, there is a hadith narrated from the life of Abu Dawood, stating that "From Abi Hurairah, he said, "what I've learned from the Messenger of Allah saw," he said." Verily Allah will raise for this community at every beginning of a hundred years, a man who would do a reform.\textsuperscript{5}

The figures promoting the reform movement, called mujaddid are: Muhammad Bin Abdul Wahhab, Shah Waliyullah, Sultan Mahmud II, Muhammad Ali Pasha, At-Tahtawi, Jamaluddin al-Afghani, Muhammad Abdurahman Rashid Rida, Sayyid Ahmad Khan and Muhammad Iqbal.

Az-Zabīdī explains that \textit{mujaddid} in the first century is 'Umar ibn' Abd al-'Aziz, in the second Imam Shaf'ī, in the third Ibn Al-Ash'ari or Suraĳī, in the fourth Al-Asfānī, As-Srīlūkī or Al-Bāqilānī and in the fifth Al-Gazālī.\textsuperscript{9}

Dr. Hasan Al-Turabi was born in Kassala, Eastern Sudan, in 1932, from a family that had a long tradition in the teachings of Islam and Sufism. He graduated from the Faculty of Law, University of Khartoum in 1955, graduated from S-2 in the field of Law in London. In 1957, he obtained a Ph.D in Constitutional Law from the Sorbonne in Paris in 1964. As long as he lived in France, between 1959 to 1964, he never made a visit to the United States.\textsuperscript{10}

Dr. Hasan Al-Turabi became the Dean of the Faculty of Law, University of Khartoum, the positions he then left behind when he became a member of parliament and the Secretary General of the Islamic Charter in December 1964. In 1969, after a coup attempted by leftists, for the first time he was in Sudan Sudan until 1977, the year when he chose the National Reconciliation Agreement with Nameiri. He became a prosecutor Court from 1979 to 1982, and became head of advisory legal problems and abroad until March 1985. He and the leaders of other Islamic movements then thrown into prison, and was only released when the regime of Nimeiri collapsed.\textsuperscript{11}

In 1988, the National Islamic Front (NIF) led by Hasan Turabi made a coalition with the government of Sadiq al-Mahdi and brought him to become attorney general, then deputy of prime minister and foreign minister. He was the Secretary General of the Islamic Congress Khartoum consisting of parties, groups, and leaders of Islamic nationalist movements from 55 Islamic countries and the West. Since the election in 1966, he served as chairman of the parliament, the second most powerful position in the country, after the president, General Omar al-Bashir, his junior in the NIF party.\textsuperscript{12}

Being busy and active in various organizations, both in the government of Sudan and in groups and other national and international social organizations, Hasan Al-Turabi is also active in writing numerous scientific papers, one of which is an article about "the Islamic State "and a book with entitled \textit{tajdid Usul al-Fiqh al-Islami}.\textsuperscript{13}

4. The Reform of Hasan Turabi \textit{Ushul Fiqh}

Methods of \textit{istinbat} law mentioned in the books of \textit{Ushul Fiqh} either classic or modern, circulating among the Muslims in general are almost the same. The method created by classical scholar such as Imam Ash-Shaf'ī is adjusted and affected by the conditions of his day. Similarly, other scholars of the same surrounding or \textit{bi`ah} greatly affect his thought in creating or constructing the structure of \textit{Usul Fiqh}.

Times are changing rapidly and then a question arises whether the old methods are still applicable to respond the changing of the times. Hasan Turabi finds that at this time, it is necessary to reevaluate \textit{Usul Fiqh} in connection with the reality context because the origin of the product is still in the nature of classics, discourse, and theory , unable to deliver \textit{fiqh} and in contrary create unsolvable arguments. As a matter of fact, \textit{Usul Fiqh} should progress to face the challenges of modern reality.\textsuperscript{14}

At the present, the development of \textit{Usul Fiqh} methodology in the context of its relevance to the needs of modern Islamic society is urgent. As a dynamic religion, Islam is demanded to solve modern problems more deeply as formerly Islam is focussed on the principles of religion, producing \textit{furu`iyah}.

Modern rational sciences are progressing rapidly and owing to this the Muslims should properly rethink the Islamic \textit{fiqh} with new perceptions, utilizing all the knowledge as a means of worship to Allah, and creating a new format uniting the textual and rational sciences constantly going through reforms to perfection by means of experimentation and observation. By the integration of science, we shall be able to renew our religious understanding to meet the demands of modern life.

5. Need for \textit{Usul Fiqh} Methodology

To solve the growing matters in today's society, Hasan Turabi offers a methodology that can be accepted by everyone, that is integrative methodology.\textsuperscript{15}The methodology offers a return to the principle of consultation and consensus to gather various disagreements of ideas and then take a consensus so that there will be one opinion to be referred to. The opinion that has gone through agreement among the Muslim majority and a shared desire, in its application will become mandatory to be attended to though they still stand apart in the relative truth.\textsuperscript{16}

Furthermore Hasan Turabi explains that at the present time \textit{Usul Fiqh} methodology that can be used as a foundation for the revival of Islam is urgent. Besides the traditional \textit{Usul Fiqh} that has been used as a reference to \textit{istinbat}, is no longer relevant to modern condition. Then historically, the classic \textit{Usul Fiqh} contains norms affected by the nature of \textit{fiqh} at that time.\textsuperscript{17}

\textit{Usul Fiqh} Methodology has various scopes and standards adjusted with the problems to be examined. Parts of \textit{fiqh} are oriented to \textit{Ubudiah} and rituals to God, such as prayer, fasting, and pilgrimage. The laws regarding the issues of worship have been specified in details in various passages or texts so the scope of \textit{ijtihad} becomes limited in all this matter, and the understanding of \textit{fiqh} scholars is merely to collate the texts and connect them with other texts forming a whole picture of worship. Thus, the issues revolve only around the interpretation, such as examining the problem of Traditional fiqh is focussed on issues like this. The fiqh scholars do not solve the innumerable issues of social life as they only place themselves in the assemblies of science already provided. Therefore, they are far from social life. The patterns of their fatwa are around Furu , and very few scholars write books on theoretical methodology. Therefore, most of the fiqh are oriented to issues relating to individuality and worship rituals, such as marriage, divorce, manners, and largely the texts do not create contradiction in opinions.

Life of the Muslims at the present time has gone astray from the goal of Islam, especially in matters of social life. While the fatwa issued so far revolves around matters of transaction of buying and selling, while issues of social policy economics, such as organizing people's lives in the areas of production, import, export, and overcoming the high life standard or low burden of life, have not been considered by the authorities, and all these matters have not been asked yet to the fiqh scholars to be put in the real field of fiqh.

Similarly, political problems together with the rules of practice, such as consultation carried out in the community, crystallization of consensus, forms of government, loyalty and leadership in whole have not been touched well.

Likewise, religious texts in the field of social life are few. Most of the texts are focussed on goal rather on form. For example, on the subject of leadership, we will not find the text about prayer, as well as economic issues. Hasan Turabi argues that fiqh considering the purpose of social life and the welfare of beings are not developed in such a way, owing to the conditions and circumstances covering the Islamic life at that time. It is therefore not surprising that the concepts of Ushul Fiqh in accordance with this field has been forgotten and no longer growing. When Islamic life starts to complete and economic and social agreement practices are stuck on religion, such a condition requires respective new fiqh.

Tajdid offered by Hasan Turabi, has the emphasis on issues closely related to the public interest, in particular the social aspects of society, because such problems require a more comprehensive concept of ijtihad (wāsiʿah ijtihad), so as to meet the needs of modern life.

In the implementation of tajdid Ushul Fiqh, he offers some concepts to solve various problems of people's lives today, namely:

1. The use of al-qiyyās al- Wāsī (comprehensive qiyyās)

According to Hasan Turabi traditional qiyyās, inherited by former scholars, can no longer meet the needs of modern human life, because its scope is limited and rigid. The same Qiyyās, in his view, can be used to formulate the laws relating to marital, moral and religious matters. While for the goals that are common and wide, qiyyās al-Fīr (pure qiyyās) or wider and more comprehensive qiyyās are more appropriate and needed, because such a qiyyās is not bound by requirements, it is pure set by Greek logicians, subsequently adopted by Islamic scholars in formulating Islamic laws.

The concept of qiyyās meant by Hasan Turabi, which he also terms al-qiyyās al-Wāsī ', the operation of which is by studying a number of passages from the qur'an or the hadith of the Prophet, then formulated into some specific purpose or benefit piloted by syara in the laws and the specific purposes and welfare of the people are the applied to the new matter and condition formulated in the laws. Such Qiyyās, according to Hasan Turabi is similar to what done by Caliph Omar ibn Khattab. This qiyyās is also named fiqh masālih ummah wāsīʿah (fiqh, based on the common interest).

The basic concept of al-qiyyās al-Wāsī ', according to Turabi, is taken from maslahah mursalah, apart from the text itself. This type of qiyyās is also called the al-qiyyās al-imāḍī al-AWSA 'or al-maslahah al-mursalah qiyyās. The steps to do this qiyyās are:

The first step, started by collecting a number of Koranic verses or hadith, then formulated based on goal or a particular matter found in the collection of verses or the hadiths.

The second step is to use a specific purpose or matter already formulated as a base in determining the law for new cases occurring in the new circumstances as well, without having to look at the shape and condition of these cases in details. Only the meaning and welfare are considered, and after that the law from previous cases was applied to the new case, based on the equation of meaning and the benefit owned by both. Finally, with reference to such procedures, new issues facing modern life can be solved.

Hasan Turabi gives an example of his concept of qiyyās above by quoting a hadith of the Prophet containing the story of a husband having sexual intercourse (jima ') with his wife during the day of Ramadan, and as the result, his fast becomes void and he is sentenced. However, having studied the situation, the Prophet finally release the man and Prophet says:

Abu Hurairah r.a. has said : " a man comes to the Prophet and says: I have been wretched, O Messenger of Allah, and the Prophet says:" What makes you wretched? The man says: "I have done sex with wife during Ramadan, and as the result, his fast becomes void and he is sentenced. However, having studied the situation, the Prophet finally release the man and Prophet says:

Such a similar case, says Turabi, will not happen again in similar circumstances but a certain meaning can be inferred from such an event. This example is an act resulted in breaking the fast and this act can be used to evaluate other acts can break the fast, such as eating and drinking, and others.

Regarding this method, Turabi further comments that the method of qiyas could be broader or narrower, depending on the extent to which the freedom of the requirements specified for implementing the qiyas and its effect on the improvement of the establishment of Islamic law. Maslahah mursalah qiyas is a higher level qiyas that is used to study the basis of the various laws, such as through qiyas we can collect a number of laws on specific cases, and then formulate the laws for the benefit of common interest. Through the concept of such welfareness, we can find a way to organize life in line with the will of syara.

2. The use of wide istishāb (al-Istishāb al-Wāsi’)

Turabi says that the idea of istishāb, obviously shows that Islam is not to reconstruct the life of mankind based on the new provisions and but also to destroy completely the provisions that have been implemented previously.

But the coming of Islam is to ensure the continuity of the enactment of practices and traditions that have been established reflecting the nature of justice and truth, and at the same time improving and modifying practices deviating from justice. The Prophet himself does not consider that all norms previously done are to be canceled, and must be destroyed to build a religion on the completely new principle. However, the principle used is that what is already known by man can be accepted, while religion is revealed to rectify their affairs distorted. Allah swt says:

Meaning: Be thou a forgiving person ask people to do ma'ruf and and turn away from ignorant people.

The content of Surat al-Araf: 199 is to do good. The word Ma'ruf in this verse can be understood containing two meanings, namely: virtue and mature practice confessed by syara, or cancellation or rejection towards wrong and unfair act and in this case termed out of ma'ruf. Then Turabi says that this is the base of istikhab. From the istikhab concept, Hasan Turabi, formulates the concept of skill (al-Ibadah) which is the general provision of syara against acts or actions that are socially useful and not causing harm. In other words, everything is allowed as long as there is no indication of being prohibited.

Hasan Turabi concludes that the principle of istikhab together with the concept of comprehensive qiyas (qiyas Wasi’) can produce comprehensive and dynamic fiqh that could answer all the problems.

Analysis

The reform offered by Hassan Turabi as already explained by the writer contains two items: al-qiyas al-Wasi’ and al-istikhab al-Wasi’. Al-Qiyas al-Wasi’ (wide qiyas) and is inspired by the former Usul Fiqh scholars, using qiyas as a way to review the law that is not explained in Al-qur’an or hadith.

Hasan Turabi in using wide qiyas, seems different from the formulation used by the former scholars of fiqh. The goal of qiyas meant by Hasan Turabi, is concerned with general matters and for the public interest, and not concerned with the problems of marriage, as well as other ritual worships.

Regarding this matter, Hasan Turbi seems to refer to the former scholars of Ushul Fiqh.

Former scholars of fiqh before Turabi in evaluating matters of legalization not mentioned in Al-Qur’an or hadith use qiyas. Qiyas that can be used to evaluate the law has certain pillars, namely: originality, branches, illat and law. Originality is a problem that will be made matter of qiyas; for example if making qiyas for intoxicating drinks such as whiskey, then the originality is khamar and the branch is whiskey and illatnya is the intoxicating element. The law of drinking alcohol is forbidden or haram. Prohibition of wine is caused by the element of Iskar (alcohol) so drinking whiskey is also haram, because it has the same illat, intoxicating; between the matters of making qiyas with the originality, there is no similarity and qiyas cannot be conducted. This is the model of qiyas done by the former scholars since the time of Imran SYafi’i.

In common issues, Hasan Turabi uses the same term, but in the methodology application he is different from Ushul scholars. Qiyas used by Hasan Turabi actually leads to maslahah al-mursalah, as indeed in the procedure of using qiyas, Hasan Turabi is different from what is done by the scholars of Ushul. In the application procedure, the Ushul scholars see similarities between illat and fur’ with asl. While Hasan Turabi in using qiyas, does not touch matters of illat as the focus goes to the welfare of the people.

Maslahah al-mursalah meant in Islamic Shari’ah is conveyed through revelation: Qur’an and purposeful hadith (Maqasid ash-shari’a) for the benefit of mankind. Maqasid theory actually has been developed by scholars of fiqh before Hasan Turabi, namely ash-Syatibi. (730-790 H), even scholars before ash-Syatibi also uses the point of al-mursalah, like Imam Malik (93-179 H).

The second reform offered by Al-Turabi is wide istikhab (al-Istishāb al-Wasi’). The istikhab concept has actually been used long before Al-Turabi by classical scholars such as Malik, Hanafi, Shafi’i, and Ahmad ibn Hanbal. Al-Turabi simply adds the words al-wāsi’ and that the term is not used by mutaqaddimin scholars. Istishāb according to the definition proposed by Ushul scholars is the consideration that the law remains unchanged as the original condition has no norms or there are no norms to make alteration.

The base or field of istikhab according to Al-Turabi is a tradition or customs prevailing in the society from one to the next generation. As far as these traditions have value of ma'ruf or beneficial to mankind and there is no pointof banning then the it is ibāhah (allowed). But the field of istikhab according to Ushul scholars is not limited to Mu'amalah and prevailing traditions but is also extended to the laws of worship. If someone is doubtful whether he has already taken wudu, then according to istikhab the person should again take the wudu. The concept of istikhab al-wāsi’ offered by Al-Turabi states that the tradition that is considered ma'ruf, could still be practices as long as there is no rule that prohibit the practice of the tradition concerned as this is used by the former Ushul scholars in terms of ‘urf sahib (good tradition). *‘urf fasid, or ‘urf, that is not suitable with the principle of Islamic law or against with the Islamic values could not be put into consideration.
6. Conclusion

The reform of Ushul Fiqh offered by Hasan al-Turabi does not change the whole framework of Ushul Fiqh, by the former scholars. Hasan Turabi only offers two points.

1) The base of the use of al-qiyās al-wāsī (wide and comprehensive qiyas) is taken from masāḥil al-mursalah. Basically Islamic syari’at is for the welfare of the people and not to make people suffer.

2) The use of wide istishabh is based on the tradition or uraf, that has prevailed in the society. The tradition has existed before the Islamic syari’at. Islam comes not to construct human life based on new certain norms or to destroy all that has existed before. Islam comes to ensure the continuity of the existing practice of tradition that has moral values, justice and truth and at the same time improve and modifies anything that has gone astray.

The reform concept of Ushul Fiqh offered by Hasan al-Turabi has already been pioneered by the former Ushul scholars. Al-Turabi takes the terms qiyās and istishabh then changes into al-wāsī, with the base that is not far different with that of the thoughts of the former Ushul scholars. According to the writer, the concept of Al-Turabi is not a new thing.
